MUNICIPAL GOVERNMENT

Difficulties Which Must Be Faced.

W. O. SMITH GIVES VIEWS OF PLANS

Time Hardly Ripe for the Great
Changes—Must Await Development of Electorate.

Municipal government was the theme which drew to the residence of Mr. W. O. Smith, Saturday evening, a large attendance of the members of the Young Men's Research Club, the principal paper being that of the host. Mr. Smith gave at length a discussion of the various forms of municipal government.

Beginning with Paris he showed the combination of local and national control of the city, citing Manchester, England, as a city where the limited franchise and property qualifications govern the voters, and then turning to the general American type, where universal suffrage is the rule, saying in concluding this section of the paper:

"The American democratic form is suited only to a community in which the average intelligence and education of the voters is of a high order. Even with the standards of the American people great abuses and misrule have existed in many cases."

Mr. Smith read at length from the Municipal Program, prepared by the National Municipal League, two years ago, showing the difficulties in the way of forming a system of municipal government. In regard to acting for these islands he said the subject should be approached dispassionately and the best thought given to the subject. While there are objections to the present centralized system no good citizen, he said, would favor change unless it would promote the best interests of the community. Referring to Americanism he said:

"The basic American idea of government is to create and maintain a form of government best suited to develop and protect the highest interests of the citizen and the community. Under conditions existing generally throughout the country the popular form of city government with manhood suffrage has accomplished many good results. But even the most ardent advocate of democracy cannot be blind to the glaring evils and abuses which have existed under the system. Under the common American form of city government, and the political machinery which it has made possible and fostered, the result has in many cases been very far from government "of the people, by the people and for the people," but rather manipulation and government by the scheming, skillful few. In too many instances the tyranny and despotism of the "machine" has been diametrically opposed to true American principles."

"The establishment of a Territorial government under the Constitution and laws of the United States marked a great stride forward along the line of democratic-republican government in these islands. It is still, however, in its infancy, and under the conditions of the population and results thus far demonstrated, it would appear prudent that further time be given for adjustment to the new conditions, and the development of civic ideals, before another momentous step be taken."

"If experience shows that better results cannot be obtained in the affairs of the general Territorial government with the present voting population, then greater voting privileges and powers should be withheld until the character of the voting population improves."

"It is to be hoped that in the near future the majority of the voters of this community will show that progress has been made in their conceptions of the responsibilities and dignity of citizenship, and that additional steps may safely be taken in the development of popular government."

During the discussion Mr. Smith answered questions, saying among other things that he would favor division of government first at Hilo and Honolulu, before it was introduced elsewhere. He said also that at first Honolulu would have no property upon which to borrow money, owing to the fact that all property rights lie in the United States and surrender is hardly probable seeing the manner in which the people have exercised their suffrages. This would leave the only funds those secured by using taxes as security. He said a step might be made by establishing local boards of works and schools to try as an experiment.

Von Hamm-Young Co. Buys Eclipse

The gasoline schooner Eclipse which has been a source of worry and expense to the Hawaiian Navigation Company since its construction over two years ago, was finally sold at public auction Saturday to the Von Hamm-Young Company. J. F. Morgan's representative auctioneer the vessel at the Irmgard wharf and the Von Hamm-Young Company was the only bidder. They paid $7000 for the schooner. The Hawaiian Navigation Company offered the boat to the Board of Health for $12,000, but Supt. Boyd refused to purchase it at that price. She was built two years ago at a cost of $25,000, but has never been a success. The purchasers of the boat intend to remodel the schooner and fit her with a larger gasoline engine. The improvements to be made will cost $3000 or $4000. The Eclipse will continue in the island trade, but will take in a larger field than heretofore, as the addition of more powerful engines will permit this. The Hawaiian Navigation Company is to dissolve.
